

What difference can a photograph make?

In 1988, more than 80,000 people attended a concert at Wembley Stadium to celebrate the 70th birthday of South Africa's prisoner 46664 – Nelson Mandela. The iconic photograph, of that momentous day, was taken by international photographer John Cole. This image now hangs on the wall of Mr. Mandela's Johannesburg home.

Twenty-two years later, with this original image in mind, actor, producer and founder of Wilton Pictures David Westhead decided to set up a photographic course against the backdrop of the World Cup in Soweto so that John could teach disadvantaged kids how to 'feed their families' with a camera.

Wembley to Soweto, the acclaimed international photographic exhibition of images taken by these 8 disadvantaged teenagers, is now coming to Esher. All Saints Weston is the first church to ever host these images.

Championed by Nelson Mandela's grandson Kweku and endorsed by celebrities from the world of film and television, international football clubs and renowned politicians, including the Mandela family, Wembley to Soweto is an extraordinary example of the difference a picture can make. "There's no better way to communicate across cultures than with an image that takes your breadth away... One photo can change a life," commented Kweku Mandela.

Visit Wembley to Soweto at All Saints Church to see the inspirational results for yourself. Enter our competitions for a chance to win exclusive prizes. Follow us on Twitter, Facebook and You Tube for the latest news and apply for an invite to our gala on the 18th February at 7pm. Prints and the Wembley to Soweto book, containing over 50 images, are available online at store.wiltonpictures.com or can be purchased at the church.
